Band concert in behalf of suffering Belgians, opera house, Friday Dec. 11.
Christmas, Friday, December 25.

THURSDAY, NOV. 12, 1914

Good evening! Of course, none of this talk about game hogs hits you.

Scotch the game hog.

Save your dollars for the Belgian relief concert.

Think of it; but for the Emden, Australia might have remained unknown to readers of war news.

In the matter of war news from France, you can read both sides and guess which side is lying the hardest.

Those Greeks who skipped out of town recently are no doubt expressing their opinion of the hot polio of Clearfield.

Berlin doesn't know what war is, it is said. But does nobody wear when the list of dead is read in German capital?

Women suffragists will be interested in learning that the sultan of Turkey has fifteen wives. He ought to know something of warfare.

Englishmen are as glad over the destruction of the Emden as they would be if Mrs. Pankhurst were to take up her abode at the North pole.

It is a fact that Clearfield county farmers do not raise enough farm produce to supply the people of Clearfield. Why is this state of affairs?

The Chamber of Commerce might import a Lancaster county export and have him teach the people of the county how to make real old-fashioned sausage.

President Wilson says that he has no objection to the people talking of a bigger navy as a form of "mental exercise." The schoolmaster sure is full of humor.

There has been war in Europe for three months, with neither side able to declare a victory. And yet military experts declared when hostilities broke out that the war would be a short one.

Puck, the funny publication, wants students of colleges trained in military tactics instead of devoting their brain to football. No doubt college students will regard this as the best joke Puck has perpetrated for some time.

Senator Penrose says he paid out about nine thousand dollars in his recent campaign for United States senator. Unfortunately, the senator does not state how much of this money went to Democrats who supported him.

RESTRICT THE NUMBER

There is only one way by which the game hog may be driven out of the woods in this state, and that is by lessening the number of game birds that may be shot in a season. It is useless to attempt to persuade the game hog to abandon his practice of cleaning out a district of all game birds. The average game hog glories in his ability to slay every bird in a given district; he really believes that he is accomplishing something remarkably commendatory when he kills everything in sight. When he returns home he displays his game with as much satisfaction as he is felt by the general who has won a battle.

It is needless to say that the game hog is despised by the true sportsman. There is no glory in being able to slay birds by the hundred during a season. There is no honor in cleaning the birds from a given district with the aid of dogs and modern guns. Recognizing the futility of convincing the game hogs of their crimes against game, the true sportsman should combine and demand of the legislature that the game laws be so amended that quail shall not be killed in certain counties for at least five years and that no hunter shall kill more than ten pheasants in a season. There is no other way to get rid of the game hog, who now has the sanction of the game commission, the wardens and the natives to encourage him in his nefarious work.

A HAVEN OF REST

Local interest has been aroused by the announcement that the Fallon house, at Lock Haven, has passed out of the hands of the Schuylers, who conducted that hostelry many years. Clearfielders who at any time within the past forty years went down the river on rafts or by train always made the Fallon house their headquarters, as it was there that the lumber buyers of the eastern markets met the raftsmen and dickered for the timber floating in the Lock Haven pool on its way to that haven.

Men who have passed away regarded the Fallon house as their second home, and many hours did they spend in social chat, innocent games of cards and other entertainment and amusements. If some of the raftsmen returned from Lock Haven minus some of the cash they had received for their timber they put it down to profit and loss or ill-luck in not entering a full house at the opportune moment, and were ready for another sojourn with the pasteboards on the next trip. The Fallon house has seen many strange things, but fortunately it cannot reveal to the people of today what happened within its walls in the good old rafting days.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL

A Pittsburgh minister, the Rev. Dr. Bustard, has startled some of the good people of that city, to say nothing of other ministers, with the declaration that men who occupy the pulpits of churches should preach the gospel and not talk politics, business and so on. This minister must be quite old fashioned. There was a time in the history of this country when ministers devoted their entire time to preaching, and teaching the gospel but only a few old fogies now indulge in that practice, although all of them doubtless feel that they are doing what they have been called upon to do in that respect.

Ministers who are poorly paid cannot be expected to preach to suit the men who help pay their salaries. If those men would rather hear a discussion of the war, the stars or something else other than a sermon on the truths of the gospels. Ministers are men, after all, and they must have some regard for the sources of their salaries. They do not like to move from one charge to another any more than ordinary men like to move from one location to another. The minister who preaches the gospel these days is brave, but he is likely to preach to many empty pews in the course of his pastorate.

ROASTED CHESTNUTS

Here's the greenwood, here's the lane,
Here's the meadow-bottom sweet
With the little creek whose strain
Of silver sang at the pasture's feet;
The paw-paws leaning o'er the brake
In the old swamp-bottom, thick with reeds,
And here is the winding road again
Where the bleeding heart of summer bleeds.

Here's the quail's clear call, the croak
Of the brinded crow—a soaring gloom!

Here's where the road from the old mill broke,
And here's the marigolds still bloom;
Here, all here, on this little stand
When the roasting chestnuts steam,
And your thoughts go off to a fairy land
In the valley of golden dream.

You taste it all in the taste of these—
Something fine as a fine old cheese.
That our little brother from over seas
Finds so full of the Alpine breeze,
And the snow and the ice and the eldeweiss.

Here's the pines and the willow and pod
Of the purple thistle, the dew-drenched clover.
The sparrow's chirp and the field
lark's whistle,
And the autumn fields of the world
of God.

REV. ROBERT C. PETERS

This item from the Philadelphia North American is of unusual interest to Clearfield taxpayers:

"There were thirteen victims before Judge Singleton Bell, at Clearfield, Clearfield county, for sentence 'the other day, and eleven of them admitted that booze was the cause of their trouble. There are still a few persons who deny that the voters of the county have a right to pass upon this, the greatest item of expense in the entire country.'"

Steel Workers Oppose Booze.

The following is a notice signed by the president and general superintendent and posted in the plant of the Illinois Steel Works, Joliet, Illinois, a branch of the Illinois Steel company:

For the promotion of safety and welfare, it is hoped that all employees will avoid the use of intoxicants. Under the rules of the Joliet works, any employee using intoxicating liquors while on duty will be discharged. In making promotions in any department of the plant, superintendent of departments and foremen will select for promotion only those who do not use intoxicating liquors.

Russia Dry

Isn't it glorious! The great Russian Empire has gone dry. War forced a trial of prohibition, and the results were so satisfactory that the Czar has said "no more vodka."

Germany is Falling Into Line

A German distiller in Boosfort's Wire and Spirit Circular for October 10 says: "It is the German idea that people should be taught that wine, beer, whiskey, etc., are blessings to be used in moderation." This gentleman's cable connections with Germany are cut. He hasn't heard the latest news at all. Summed up in the words of an eminent scientist, it is: "The pro-liquor Germans in America have not their people at home with them."

COAL BUSINESS IS NOT BOOMING AT PRESENT

The coal business is not on the boom as yet. The majority of the R. & P. Coal and Iron Company's mines are working two and three days each week.

The Clearfield Bituminous Coal Corporation's mines at Rositer were shut down Friday and Saturday of last week for the first time since spring.

Valuable Information On Diseases of Cattle

Coming as it does at the beginning of winter, and with food generally on a war basis of prices, it is a genuine calamity. While federal officials are supplementing the work of the states in fighting the disease, it is up to every cattle raiser in Clearfield county to take every possible precaution. Dr. H. D. Gill, dean of the New York Veterinary school, and in charge of the New York city quarantine, has given some valuable information concerning the symptoms and treatment of cases which may aid readers of the Progress. It is as follows:

"This disease begins with a very red and angry-looking sore between the two toes. This soon becomes ulcerated and then incrusts with dirt.

"Drooling from the mouth follows. On lifting up the lips the mucous membrane will be found to be ulcerated in irregular lines, running often up into the nostrils.

"The animal frequently smucks its lips. There is a falling off in weight and in the amount of milk the animal gives.

"Isolate at once the animals in which the disease appears and those who have been anywhere near them. Establish an absolute quarantine of the farm.

"Do not go near or touch the cow unless you are wearing a rubber coat, rubber boots and rubber gloves. Disinfect these as soon as you leave with a five per cent solution of carbolic acid.

"If the disease is found the animal must be killed at once, as well as those which have been exposed to it. The ones that have not contracted the disease may be used for food. Everything that has been near the cow or may have been a possible source of infection must be disinfected."

As soon as evidence of the disease is discovered, the proper authorities should be notified at once by telegraph or telephone. Failure to do this will prolong the time of the epidemic, and may work incalculable harm. Prompt and efficient co-operation on the part of all concerned is essential to a quick stamping out of plague. The loss will be heavy enough at best. Every effort should be made to reduce it to the minimum.

A PROBLEM IN FOOTBALL FOR STUDENTS TO SOLVE

Here is a problem for those who are fond of mathematics:

Washington & Jefferson 105 to 0. Dickinson beat Western Maryland 40 to 0. Western Maryland won from Maryland Agricultural College, 30 to 0.

The question is: If W. & J. played against Maryland Agricultural College what would be the score?

Those who submit a correct answer to the above may take a whirl at this little quiz:

Wisconsin beat Ohio State 7 to 6. Illinois beat Ohio State 37 to 0.

What will be the score when Illinois and Wisconsin clash on November 21st?

Amateur Sherlockers may tackle this mystery:

Dartmouth beat Williams 21 to 3. Princeton beat Dartmouth 16 to 12. A week later the Princeton team that beat Dartmouth and the Williams team that was walloped by Dartmouth battled to a 7-7 tie?

How do you account for this?

The business of officiating in a football game in these new football days is causing lots of wrinkles to grow upon the brows of those who pursue the aforesaid business.

Most of the officials have studied the new rules so that they know them backwards, but in nearly every game some new angle arises—some variation of one of the rules—that opens the question as to whether the play is legal or illegal. The officials, whose judgment must be of the snap variety earning their pay.

Yale isn't quite as cheerful concerning its prospects in the Harvard game on the 21st as it was before. It learned that Charley Brickley was getting quite proficient as a left legged booter.

ten trials from inside the 25 yard line, and he hoped to increase his average and the distance before the Yale game.

Brickley may get into the Yale game—and he may not. If Harvard needs his boot and needs it greatly, Brickley probably will disregard the doctor's orders and jump into the pasture for the sake of his Alma Mater. But under no circumstances will Brickley enter the game for any other purpose than to kick.

It seems that about one half of the population of these United States wants to be among those present at the Yale-Harvard game on the 21st. Before that date rolls around it may be that Yale and Harvard will be playing merely for the championship of Yale or Harvard, but no one seems to mind that.

The new Yale Bowl, the greatest stadium in the world, normally seats 61,000 persons. For the Yale-Harvard game 9,000 extra seats will be added. That will bring the total seating capacity to 70,000. Already application has been made for over 100,000 seats. Before the game is played it is likely that the application list will number 135,000.

This is what they're saying out West about Pete Russell, the great Chicago quarterback:

"Long runs are becoming so common with him that he'll probably be playing fifty yards or no count."

Russell to date has ripped off several runs over 60 yards and numerous ones that averaged between 35 and 55. He's a wonder in running back punts and they call him the "El" because of his ability to slip beyond the grasp of the opposing tacklers.

Maltose Muskrats.
One of the most objectionable of the pests that intrude into houses in Malta is the muskrat. Everything he touches is impregnated with the odor from which he derives his name. In a wine cellar he is worse than a dishonest bell.

In a larger he is more destructive than a dozen cats. From pure wantonness he taints and renders unmarketable everything within his reach. His odor is so powerful and at the same time so penetrating that dozens of bottles of preserves may be ruined by his merely running over the bottles. The muskrat is a squeaking little animal who commits his enormities at night, and he adds insult to injury by disturbing the repose of the victims of his depredations.—London Standard.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

CHAPTER XIII.

An Agent from Russia. The Black Hundred, not as individuals but as an organization, began to worry. Powerful, and often reckless and daring because it was powerful, it began to look about for some basic cause for all these failures against Hargrave's daughter and Hargrave's ghost. They had tried to put the inquisitive reporter out of the way, they had laid every trap they could think of to catch the mysterious visitor at the Hargrave home; they had thrown out a hundred lures to bring Hargrave out of his lair, and failed; and they had lost a dozen valuable men and several thousand dollars. This must end somewhere, and quickly.

The one ray of hope for the conspirators lay in the fact that Florence had never seen her father and knew not in the least what he looked like. They determined to try again in this direction.

"Olive it all up," said the countess to Braine. "I tell you, whatever is back of all this is stronger than we are. He knows the organization, and for all we know he may be a ghost."

"I never go back," smiled Braine. "There's something more than the ghost. There's the sport of the devil. We've been beaten in a dozen battles, and nearly always by a fluke. They have the breaks, as they say out at the Ohio grounds."

"But the time and expense when we might be getting results elsewhere? I tell you, Leo, I'm afraid. It's like always hearing some one behind you and never finding anybody when you turn. I have told you my doubts. I have also asked you to trap that butler, but you've always laughed."

"You are seeing ghosts, Olga. A new man from holy Russia," shrugging. "Is coming tonight. Evidently the head over there thinks our contributions of late have not been up to the mark, and they are going to stir us up. I am willing to wager my soul, however, that that box is simply a hoax to befuddle us. Either that or it holds the key. But the rest of them insist that the box must be recovered. When I leave this room tonight I am going over to Riverdale and stalk all by myself. I'm going to get a glimpse of that mysterious stranger. He carries a scar of mine somewhere, for I hit him that night."

The door opened and the executive chamber became silent.

"Count Paroff," boomed the voice of Vroon. "He will present his credentials."

This formality was executed as prescribed by the rules; and Count Paroff was given his chair. He spoke for a while, rather pompously.

"The head organization is not satisfied with its offspring in this Hargrave affair," he said in conclusion. "You are slow."

"Then you have come with some suggestions for the betterment of our business?" asked Braine ironically.

"Sir, this is not the hour for flippancy," said the agent coldly. Braine made a sign with his hand, a sign not observed by every one. Instantly Paroff bent lowly. He recognized that the speaker was the actual, not the nominal, head of the American branch.

"What are your suggestions?" inquired the nominal head from his chair, anxious to avoid a clash between the newcomer and the truculent master of them all.

"I have been informed that Hargrave's daughter has never seen her father, not even a photograph of him," said Paroff, more amiably.

"We are absolutely certain that this is the case," said the nominal head, who was known as the president. "But we know one play in that direction, and it failed miserably."

"I have the story," replied Paroff. "It was clumsily done. The ruse was an old one."

Braine was frank enough to admit the truth of this statement, however much he disliked the admission. "I modeled."

"I have authority to take care of this affair. We cannot wait for men. Those government plans of fortifications of the Panama are being. There's your millions. But the fact remains that it is the law of the Black Hundred now to step down till absolutely defeated. The hidden million is but bait, we must find and break this renegade Hargrave."

"If he lives," said Braine.

"Who can say one way or another?" brusquely asked Paroff. "The fact that all your plans and schemes have come to naught should tell you that you are not fighting."

"There is but one way to bring it to a truth."

"And that is to make a cat's paw of his daughter," suggested Braine. "And we have worked and tried and ceaselessly. We are quite capable of listening to your suggestions."

"And so am I," replied Paroff, with his ear to the door. "I am selling about. And some day, my energetic friend, I'm going to come back for that butler."

Count Paroff cleared his throat and laid his plans before the assembly. "To act frankly and to the point, to go boldly to the Hargrave home and proclaim myself Hargrave. I can disguise myself in a hundred ways, but at least temporarily fool the butler."

"Who has been with his master for fourteen years, knows every move, habit, gesture, inflection," interposed Braine. "But proceed, count, proceed. You will remember the old adage; too many cooks."

"Ah," flashed back the count, "but a new cook?"

Olga touched Braine's arm warningly. "You mean, then, that there has been talk in St. Petersburg of disposing of some one?"

"A good deal of talk, sir," haughtily, forgetting that he had bent humbly enough but a few moments gone.

"Very well; go on."

Thought the man at the peephole above. "There's another adage. When thieves fall out, then honest men get their dues. Yes, yes, proceed, proceed."

Paroff went on. "I shall, then, go frankly to the Hargrave house and claim my own. Meantime I leave to you the business of luring the butler away. Half an hour is all I need to bring that child here, to break the wall that stands between us and what we seek."

"Is that so?" murmured Braine.

"Olga, I want you to play a trick on this handsome delegate-at-large. I'm not very enthusiastic over his talk. I want him humiliated. All you have to do, he says, is to walk into the Hargrave house and walk out again."

Well, let's you and I see that he does this and nothing else. I'll have no one meddling with my own game."

Some one sneezed, and everybody looked at his neighbor. The sneeze was repeated, but muffled, as if some one was desperately anxious to avoid sneezing.

"It came from above!" whispered Olga. "Don't look up!"

Braine was cool. He walked idly across the room to where Vroon sat.

"Very well, Paroff, we give you free rein. To Vroon he said. "Some one is watching us from the room overhead. I thought that room belonged to us."

"It does," said Vroon stolidly.

"Then how is it that some one is watching from up there? No excitement. I'm going to bid every one good-night, then I'm going to investigate. When I leave you will quietly send men to all exits to the building. I want the man who sneezed, and I want him badly."

Olga departed with Braine, only she immediately sought the taxi that brought her and was driven home. It was always understood that when any exploit was under way here, she was to make her departure.

Vroon stationed his men at the several exits and Braine went upstairs. The man who had sneezed, however, had vanished as completely as if he had worn that invisible cloak one reads about in the Persian tales. As a matter of fact, after the second sneeze he had gone up to the roof, got out by the trap, and jumped.

Other risky business, too—to the next roof and had clambered down the fire escape of the second building. He was swearing immoderately. After all these days of care and planning, after all his cleverness in locating the rendezvous of the Black Hundred, and

Norton Wanted to Kiss Her. the powder to blow him up with. "But my dear, you must be very careful," he said. "Jones and I will always be about somewhere. If they really get hold of you once, God alone knows what will happen. It is not you it is your poor father they want to bring out into the open. If they knew where he was they would not bother you in the least."

"Have I really a father? Sometimes I doubt. Why couldn't he steal into the house and see me, just once?"

"Perhaps he dares not. This house is always watched, night and day."

Count Paroff Presents His Credentials.

now to lose his advantage because of an uncontrollable sneeze? He would never dare go back, and just when he was beginning to pick up fine bits of information? So Florence Hargrave was going to have a new father in a day or so? There were some clever rogues among this band of theirs; but their cleverness was well offset by an equal number of fools.

Yes, there were some clever rogues, and to prove this assertion Braine secured a taxicab and drove furiously away, his destination the home of his ancient enemy. He dropped the cab a block or two away and presently stowed himself away in the summer house at the left of the lawn. It would have been a capital idea—that is, if the other man had not thought of and anticipated this very thing. So he used a public pay station telephone and Braine waited in vain, waited till the lights in the Hargrave house went out one by one and it became wrapped in darkness within and moonshine without.

Braine was a philosopher. He returned to his waiting taxicab drove home, paid the bill, smiling grimly, and went to bed. It was going to be a wonderful game of blind man's buff, and it was going to be sport to watch this fool Paroff blunder into a pit.

The next afternoon Florence and Norton sat in the summer house talking of the future. Lovers are prone to talk of that. As if anything else in the world ever equals the present! They talked of nice little apartments and vacations in the summer and how much they would save out of his salary, and a thousand and one other things which would not interest you at all if I recounted them in detail. But they did love each other, and they were going to be married, you may be certain of that. They did not care a snap of the finger what Jones thought. They were going to be married, and that was all there was to it. Of course, Florence couldn't touch a penny of her father's money. If he, Norton, couldn't take care of her without help, why, he wouldn't be worth much to her.

"I would," he smiled. He wanted to kiss her, but the eternal Jones might be watching from the windows; and so he patted her hand instead and walked down the gravelled path to the street.

It was difficult work for Florence to play at friendship. She was like her father; she did not bestow it on every one. She had given her friendship to the Russian, the first real friendship in her life, and she had been roughly disillusioned. But if the countess could act so coldly; and of the two her acting was the more consummate. She could smile and laugh and jest, all the while her heart was burning with wrath.

though you'll look in vain to discover any one. Your father knows best what he is doing, my dear girl! You see, I met him years ago in Ohio, and when he started out to do a certain thing he generally did it. He never botched any of his plans. So we all must wait. Only I'm going to marry you all the same, whether he likes it or not. The rogues will try to impose upon you again, but do not pay any attention to notes or personals in the papers. And it was a lucky thing that I was on the freighter that picked you up at sea. I shall always wonder how that yacht took fire."

"So shall I," replied Florence, her brows drawing together in puzzlement. "Sometimes I think I must have done it. You know, people out of their heads do strange things. And this man Braine is a scoundrel!"

"Yes, and more than that, he is the dear friend of the countess. But understand you must never let her dream or suspect that you know. By lulling her into overconfidence some day she will naturally grow careless, and then we'll have them all. I think I understand what your father's idea is. Not to have them arrested for blackmail, but practically to exterminate them, put them in prison for such terms of years that they'll die there. When you see a snake a poisonous one don't let it get away. Kill it. Well, I must be off to work."

"And you be careful, too. You are in more danger than I am."

"But I'm a man and can dodge quick," he laughed, picking up his hat. "What a horrid thing money is! If I hadn't any money, nobody would bother me."

"I would," he smiled. He wanted to kiss her, but the eternal Jones might be watching from the windows; and so he patted her hand instead and walked down the gravelled path to the street.

It was difficult work for Florence to play at friendship. She was like her father; she did not bestow it on every one. She had given her friendship to the Russian, the first real friendship in her life, and she had been roughly disillusioned. But if the countess could act so coldly; and of the two her acting was the more consummate. She could smile and laugh and jest, all the while her heart was burning with wrath.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur it Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks dry, wisp and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle of "Weyh's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair, besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You maintain a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years young.

CORRESPONDENCE

OSCEOLA MILLS

William Woodcock, H. S. Brown, A. J. Oldham and Owen Kline are among a party of hunters in the Green Woods. A telephone message states they shot a fine buck yesterday.

The funeral of Mrs. Catherine Quigley was held this morning at the Catholic church, Rev. M. J. Desmond officiating. The deceased was aged about 71 years and had been a resident of the town for over fifty years. Her husband preceded her several years ago. The following children survive her: Mrs. Jas. Cahill, Mrs. Christoff and George, of this place and William, of Reno.

Postmaster Arthur Brown has arranged that a mail will be received on the train from Tyrone at 10:00 P. M. This will be distributed early the following morning. This arrangement will be greatly appreciated by the business and traveling men, as they will by this plan receive mail about three hours earlier than formerly.

The entertainment under the direction of the high school faculty was greatly appreciated by those who were present. Tuesday evening. There should have been a larger attendance, however. This is not a money-making scheme, but simply for the entertainment and culture of our town. We hope the remaining numbers of the course will be better attended.

CLEARFIELD, R. F. D., NO. 2

Roy Desmond, who is a patient at the state sanatorium, at Mt. Airy, for tuberculosis sufferers, has just written his mother, Mrs. Clara Newman, that he is slowly improving and hopes to be discharged in a few months.

A lady who was at Mrs. G. W. Ogden's birthday surprise party Saturday reminds us that we did not give a complete report of the affair and adds: "When Mrs. Ogden came home from town and found her neighbors and friends gathered around her, she had prepared a party, such a planer as only Mrs. Ogden ladies are famed for." But, how could we know anything about that dinner when we never got so much as a word of it?

There is an unfortunate young man in these parts who has made himself disagreeable with his best girl, and thing we can clear the affair up for him have decided to act as arbitrator. To begin with, we would say: "Mabel, you have cruelly wronged your lover, for he was not with the other girl as you suspect. No, he is as innocent as a babe in a cradle and was never happier than he was that evening when he started for your home and he almost reached it and all the while was thinking of you and how you could have cut him with a knife. In fact, these things completely absorbed him and when he saw a pretty little black and white kitten he could not help but reach down to stroke it. (You know young men in love always want to be stroking something.) And Oh! Lady of Heaven! It was the wrong kind of a kitten. Now Mabel, do you see how you have wronged your innocent lover? I can assure you he will be around as soon as he gets out of bed, and, Mabel, I would advise you not to be too inquisitive, it might embarrass him. Now then, we venture there will be a sweet reunion to these parts in the near future, and it makes us feel like a great philanthropist to know we have played an important part in bringing it about."

Y. M. C. A. MINSTRELS

REHEARSE AGAIN TONIGHT

The regular rehearsals of the Y. M. C. A. Minstrels will be held at the association rooms this evening. The work is progressing nicely for the big local talent show which will be held the next week in December.

IN THE MOVIES

OPENING A BANKERS EYES AT THE GLOBE TONIGHT

"Tainted Money." John Bennett, wealthy financier, does not realize the misery he is causing by his manipulation of the stock market. His daughter Constance shares his delight in his success. Their eyes are opened by David, a settlement worker.

"It Was Some Party." A laughter producing comedy that will delight the audience.

"Broncho Billy's Jealousy." Broncho Billy had promised Marguerite that he would never drink again. She agreed to marry him. That afternoon a village gossip sees Marguerite with Roy Turner and makes trouble, but the tangle is straightened out in time to prevent a duel.

"Algiers Sister" is a good western comedy of life on the plains.

"MR. NOAD'S ADLESS DAY" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

opera house movies. "Mr. Noad's Adless Day." Mr. Noad goes to have the endless line of advertisements that he sees every day. In a dream, Satan comes and promises him anything that he wishes for, and Mr. Noad promptly wishes for an adless world. Still dreaming he sees everything without a label, even to numbers on the doors and wakes up glad for the advertisements he sets.

"The Mystery of Grayson Hall." The unraveling of this story a web of avarice and jealousy is laid bare. The play has rare dramatic power. Every part is played by an artist.

"The Fruit of Evil" is a stock drama at the opera house this evening.

EXTRADITION OF PRISONERS

under arrest or likely to depart from the place wherein he has been located and from which it is sought to return him, and delay would be fatal. "Some governors have adopted an ironclad rule to the effect that they will not consider any question involved in a matter of extradition other than the identity of the individual under arrest. While no doubt that rule serves to shut off much of the resistance and the resultant hearings involved therein, at the same time it is hard to believe that grave wrongs may not be done to liberty and personal rights by the enforcement of such a rule.

"And yet there are most substantial reasons to be urged against the system of allowing a hearing on the question of the justice of the demand to return the alleged fugitive. If a hearing on any question other than the question of identity is granted, it must of necessity involve the production of evidence of acts that occurred at distances many hundreds and sometimes thousands of miles from the seat of hearing. Even on the question of flight there is only meager possibility of getting at the real facts in the ordinary case. The prisoner will, of course, deny that he fled, and it is possible that the agent of the governor who is present with the requisition may not have knowledge on that subject. Frequently a prisoner is found among friends who profess to have intimate knowledge of the facts and circumstances of the alleged flight. In that case, if a hearing is to be granted the prisoner will produce what seems to be overwhelming proof to controvert the charges that he is a fugitive from justice. Again, on the other hand, the fact may be that the prisoner did not flee from justice but finds himself unable of adducing any proof."

EMBEZZLEMENT CHARGED AGAINST DU BOIS MAN

C. P. Munch was placed under arrest yesterday afternoon, charged with embezzlement of funds belonging to the C. P. Munch Coal company. The information was made by W. R. Davis, miner of Local Union 1188 of District No. 3, United Mine Workers of America. It is alleged that the assets or money was converted between November 3, 1913, to December, 1914, the total amount of money alleged as converted approximating $10,000.

Dr. F. D. Leopold, dentist, will be absent from his office until November 18th.

HOME MISSION WORKERS IN SESSION AT TYRONE

This year's annual convention of the Woman's Home Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Central conference held its first meeting, that of the conference executive board, at Tyrone yesterday morning at 9:30, in the church parlors. The first regular session was opened at 2 P. M. by Mrs. James E. Skidlington, president. Among the reports was one from Mrs. McCord of Clearfield, on courtesies.

Reports of secretaries were read. The corresponding secretary, Mrs. Byron Staples, of Jersey Shore, showed the following conditions: Fifty-six auxiliaries with a membership of 2,397; 44 circles, membership, 1,669; 26 Home Guard companies and seven Jewel bands, with a membership of 1,297.

The report of mission supplies sent by Mrs. George Leidy, head of that department, showed $2,297.81 total of supplies in new goods; $164 in books and magazines, $1,831 in second-hand garments.

The special feature of the evening was a Young People's rally, in charge of Conference Secretary of Young People's Work Miss Louise Hunt, of York.

The introductory address of the evening was made by Miss Hunt, after which Mrs. Skidlington delivered a brief salutatory discourse.

WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS IN NATIONAL CONVENTION

(By International News Service) Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 12.—Five hundred delegates gathered here today for the forty-sixth annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage association, which will continue five days. One of the most interesting questions to be discussed is the movement to attack the Democratic party for not supporting a woman suffrage amendment to the federal constitution.

Sentiment on this subject is badly mixed. The leaders of the section opposing the policy of continuing the attacks on the Democratic party are mostly from the equal suffrage states, and the suffrage campaign states.

The question is, in fact, with that of the policy of the congressional committee and the relations it shall have with the various state organizations. In many quarters it is felt by suffrage workers that Washington domination of the "Votes for Women" movement is a mistake.

A Good Time to Select the Furs

There will be no better time during the season for looking over fur assortments. Later there will not be the same completeness to stocks and selection will necessarily be more limited. We have taken pains to provide the best skins possible to procure and we pride ourselves upon the completeness of the line we show and upon the excellent quality of the furs we offer for your inspection and selection. You will find here many beautiful matched sets, separate muffs and scarfs and handsomely lined fur coats at prices the most reasonable we have able to offer our patrons for several seasons.

Fur sets from $10.00 up to $100.00 a set.

Fur scarfs from $2.95 up to $35.00 each.

Fur muffs from $3.00 up to $65.00 each.

Fur coats from $39.75 up to $100.00 each.

Fur trimming in a wide assortment of the new novelty neck and cuff sets as well as by the yard.

THURSDAY, NOV. 12, 1914

Good evening! Of course, none of this talk about game hogs hits you.

Scotch the game hog.

Save your dollars for the Belgian relief concert.

Think of it; but for the Emden, Australia might have remained unknown to readers of war news.

In the matter of war news from France, you can read both sides and guess which side is lying the hardest.

Those Greeks who skipped out of town recently are no doubt expressing their opinion of the hot polio of Clearfield.

Berlin doesn't know what war is, it is said. But does nobody wear when the list of dead is read in German capital?

Women suffragists will be interested in learning that the sultan of Turkey has fifteen wives. He ought to know something of warfare.

Englishmen are as glad over the destruction of the Emden as they would be if Mrs. Pankhurst were to take up her abode at the North pole.

It is a fact that Clearfield county farmers do not raise enough farm produce to supply the people of Clearfield. Why is this state of affairs?

The Chamber of Commerce might import a Lancaster county export and have him teach the people of the county how to make real old-fashioned sausage.

President Wilson says that he has no objection to the people talking of a bigger navy as a form of "mental exercise." The schoolmaster sure is full of humor.

There has been war in Europe for three months, with neither side able to declare a victory. And yet military experts declared when hostilities broke out that the war would be a short one.

Puck, the funny publication, wants students of colleges trained in military tactics instead of devoting their brain to football. No doubt college students will regard this as the best joke Puck has perpetrated for some time.

Senator Penrose says he paid out about nine thousand dollars in his recent campaign for United States senator. Unfortunately, the senator does not state how much of this money went to Democrats who supported him.

RESTRICT THE NUMBER

There is only one way by which the game hog may be driven out of the woods in this state, and that is by lessening the number of game birds that may be shot in a season. It is useless to attempt to persuade the game hog to abandon his practice of cleaning out a district of all game birds. The average game hog glories in his ability to slay every bird in a given district; he really believes that he is accomplishing something remarkably commendatory when he kills everything in sight. When he returns home he displays his game with as much satisfaction as he is felt by the general who has won a battle.

It is needless to say that the game hog is despised by the true sportsman. There is no glory in being able to slay birds by the hundred during a season. There is no honor in cleaning the birds from a given district with the aid of dogs and modern guns. Recognizing the futility of convincing the game hogs of their crimes against game, the true sportsman should combine and demand of the legislature that the game laws be so amended that quail shall not be killed in certain counties for at least five years and that no hunter shall kill more than ten pheasants in a season. There is no other way to get rid of the game hog, who now has the sanction of the game commission, the wardens and the natives to encourage him in his nefarious work.

A HAVEN OF REST

Local interest has been aroused by the announcement that the Fallon house, at Lock Haven, has passed out of the hands of the Schuylers, who conducted that hostelry many years. Clearfielders who at any time within the past forty years went down the river on rafts or by train always made the Fallon house their headquarters, as it was there that the lumber buyers of the eastern markets met the raftsmen and dickered for the timber floating in the Lock Haven pool on or its way to that haven.

Men who have passed away regarded the Fallon house as their second home, and many hours did they spend in social chat, innocent games of cards and other entertainment and amusements. If some of the raftsmen returned from Lock Haven minus some of the cash they had received for their timber they put it down to profit and loss or ill-luck in not entertaining a full house at the opportune moment, and were ready for another sojourn with the pasteboards on the next trip. The Fallon house has seen many strange things, but fortunately it cannot reveal to the people of today what happened within its walls in the good old rafting days.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL

A Pittsburgh minister, the Rev. Dr. Bustard, has startled some of the good people of that city, to say nothing of other ministers, with the declaration that men who occupy the pulpits of churches should preach the gospel and not talk politics, business and so on. This minister must be quite old fashioned. There was a time in the history of this country when ministers devoted their entire time to preaching, and teaching the gospel but only a few old fogies now indulge in that practice, although all of them doubtless feel that they are doing what they have been called upon to do in that respect.

Ministers who are poorly paid cannot be expected to preach to suit the men who help pay their salaries. If those men would rather hear a discussion of the war, the stars or something else other than a sermon on the truths of the gospels. Ministers are men, after all, and they must have some regard for the sources of their salaries. They do not like to move from one charge to another any more than ordinary men like to move from one location to another. The minister who preaches the gospel these days is brave, but he is likely to preach to many empty pews in the course of his pastorate.

ROASTED CHESTNUTS

Here's the greenwood, here's the lane,
Here's the meadow-bottom sweet
With the little creek whose strain
Of silver sang at the pasture's feet;
The paw-paws leaning o'er the brake
In the old swamp-bottom, thick with reeds,
And here is the winding road again
Where the bleeding heart of summer bleeds.

Here's the quail's clear call, the croak
Of the brinded crow—a soaring gloom!

Here's where the road from the old mill broke,
And here's the marigolds still bloom;
Here, all here, on this little stand
When the roasting chestnuts steam,
And your thoughts go off to a fairy land
In the valley of golden dream.

You taste it all in the taste of these—
Something fine as a fine old cheese.
That our little brother from over seas
Finds so full of the Alpine breeze,
And the snow and the ice and the eldewells.

Here's the pines and the willow and
pod
Of the purple thistle, the dew-drenched clover.
The sparrow's chirp and the field
lark's whistle,
And the autumn fields of the world
of God.

REV. ROBERT C. PETERS

This item from the Philadelphia North American is of unusual interest to Clearfield taxpayers:

"There were thirteen victims before Judge Singleton Bell, at Clearfield, Clearfield county, for sentence 'the other day, and eleven of them admitted that booze was the cause of their trouble. There are still a few persons who deny that the voters of the county have a right to pass upon this, the greatest item of expense in the entire country.'"

Steel Workers Oppose Booze.

The following is a notice signed by the president and general superintendent and posted in the plant of the Illinois Steel Works, Joliet, Illinois, a branch of the Illinois Steel company:

For the promotion of safety and welfare, it is hoped that all employees will avoid the use of intoxicants. Under the rules of the Joliet works, any employee using intoxicating liquors while on duty will be discharged. In making promotions in any department of the plant, superintendent of departments and foremen will select for promotion only those who do not use intoxicating liquors.

Russia Dry

Isn't it glorious! The great Russian Empire has gone dry. War forced a trial of prohibition, and the results were so satisfactory that the Czar has said "no more vodka."

Germany is Falling Into Line

A German distiller in Boosfort's Wire and Spirit Circular for October 10 says: "It is the German idea that people should be taught that wine, beer, whiskey, etc., are blessings to be used in moderation." This gentleman's cable connections with Germany are cut. He hasn't heard the latest news at all. Summed up in the words of an eminent scientist, it is: "The pro-liquor Germans in America have not their people at home with them."

Valuable Information On Diseases of Cattle

Coming as it does at the beginning of winter, and with food generally on a war basis of prices, it is a genuine calamity. While federal officials are supplementing the work of the states in fighting the disease, it is up to every cattle raiser in Clearfield county to take every possible precaution. Dr. H. D. Gill, dean of the New York Veterinary school, and in charge of the New York city quarantine, has given some valuable information concerning the symptoms and treatment of cases which may aid readers of the Progress. It is as follows:

"This disease begins with a very red and angry-looking sore between the two toes. This soon becomes ulcerated and then incrusts with dirt.

"Drooling from the mouth follows. On lifting up the lips the mucous membrane will be found to be ulcerated in irregular lines, running often up into the nostrils.

"The animal frequently smucks its lips.

"There is a falling off in weight and in the amount of milk the animal gives.

"Isolate at once the animals in which the disease appears and those who have been anywhere near them.

"Establish an absolute quarantine of the farm.

"Do not go near or touch the cow unless you are wearing a rubber coat, rubber boots and rubber gloves. Disinfect these as soon as you leave with a five per cent solution of carbolic acid.

"If the disease is found the animal must be killed at once, as well as those which have been exposed to it. The ones that have not contracted the disease may be used for food.

"Everything that has been near the cow or may have been a possible source of infection must be disinfected."

As soon as evidence of the disease is discovered, the proper authorities should be notified at once by telegraph or telephone. Failure to do this will prolong the time of the epidemic, and may work incalculable harm. Prompt and efficient co-operation on the part of all concerned is essential to a quick stamping out of plague. The loss will be heavy enough at best. Every effort should be made to reduce it to the minimum.

SPORTING NEWS

A PROBLEM IN FOOTBALL FOR STUDENTS TO SOLVE

Here is a problem for those who are fond of mathematics:

Washington & Jefferson 105 to 0. Dickinson beat Western Maryland 40 to 0. Western Maryland won from Maryland Agricultural College, 30 to 0.

The question is: If W. & J. played against Maryland Agricultural College what would be the score?

Those who submit a correct answer to the above may take a whirl at this little quiz:

Wisconsin beat Ohio State 7 to 6.

Illinois beat Ohio State 37 to 0.

What will be the score when Illinois and Wisconsin clash on November 21st?

Amateur Sherlockers may tackle this mystery:

Dartmouth beat Williams 21 to 3.

Princeton beat Dartmouth 16 to 12.

A week later the Princeton team that beat Dartmouth and the Williams team that was walloped by Dartmouth battled to a 7-7 tie?

How do you account for this?

The business of officiating in a football game in these new football days is causing lots of wrinkles to grow upon the brows of those who pursue the aforesaid business.

Most of the officials have studied the new rules so that they know them backwards, but in nearly every game some new angle arises—some variation of one of the rules—that opens the question as to whether the play is legal or illegal. The officials, whose judgment must be of the snap variety earning their pay.

Yale isn't quite as cheerful concerning its prospects in the Harvard game on the 21st as it was before it learned that Charley Brickley was getting quite proficient as a left legged booter.

ten trials from inside the 25 yard line, and he hoped to increase his average and the distance before the Yale game.

Brickley may get into the Yale game—and he may not. If Harvard needs his boot and needs it greatly, Brickley probably will disregard the doctor's orders and jump into the pasture for the sake of his Alma Mater. But under no circumstances will Brickley enter the game for any other purpose than to kick.

It seems that about one half of the population of these United States wants to be among those present at the Yale-Harvard game on the 21st. Before that date rolls around it may be that Yale and Harvard will be playing merely for the championship of Yale or Harvard, but no one seems to mind that.

The new Yale Bowl, the greatest stadium in the world, normally seats 61,000 persons. For the Yale-Harvard game 9,000 extra seats will be added. That will bring the total seating capacity to 70,000. Already application has been made for over 100,000 seats. Before the game is played it is likely that the application list will number 135,000.

This is what they're saying out West about Pete Russell, the great Chicago quarterback:

"Long runs are becoming so common with him that he'll probably be playing fifty yards or no count."

Russell to date has ripped off several runs over 60 yards and numerous ones that averaged between 35 and 55. He's a wonder in running back punts and they call him the "El" because of his ability to slip beyond the grasp of the opposing tacklers.

Maltose Muskrats.
One of the most objectionable of the pests that intrude into houses in Malta is the muskrat. Everything he touches is impregnated with the odor from which he derives his name. In a wine cellar he is worse than a dishonest butler. In a larder he is more destructive than a dozen cats. From pure wantonness he taints and renders unmarketable everything within his reach. His odor is so powerful and at the same time so penetrating that dozens of bottles of preserves may be ruined by his merely running over the bottles. The muskrat is a squeaking little animal who commits his enormities at night, and he adds insult to injury by disturbing the repose of the victims of his depredations.—London Standard.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

(Copyright, 1914, by Harold MacGrath)

CHAPTER XIII.

An Agent from Russia. The Black Hundred, not as individuals but as an organization, began to worry. Powerful, and often reckless and daring because it was powerful, it began to look about for some basic cause for all these failures against Hargrave's daughter and Hargrave's ghost. They had tried to put the inquisitive reporter out of the way, they had laid every trap they could think of to catch the mysterious visitor at the Hargrave home; they had thrown out a hundred lures to bring Hargrave out of his lair, and failed; and they had lost a dozen valuable men and several thousand dollars. This must end somewhere, and quickly.

The one ray of hope for the conspirators lay in the fact that Florence had never seen her father and knew not in the least what he looked like. They determined to try again in this direction.

"Olive it all up," said the countess to Braine. "I tell you, whatever is back of all this is stronger than we are. He knows the organization, and for all we know he may be a ghost."

"I never go back," smiled Braine. "There's something more than the Black Hundred. There's the sport of the Black Hundred. We've been beaten in a dozen battles, and nearly always by a fluke. They have the breaks, as they say out at the Ohio grounds."

"But the time and expense when we might be getting results elsewhere? I tell you, Leo, I'm afraid. It's like always hearing some one behind you and never finding anybody when you turn. I have told you my doubts. I have also asked you to trap that butler, but you've always laughed."

"You are seeing ghosts, Olga. A new man from holy Russia," shrugging. "Is coming tonight. Evidently the head over there thinks our contributions of late have not been up to the mark, and they are going to stir us up. I am willing to wager my soul, however, that that box is simply a hoax to befuddle us. Either that or it holds the key. But the rest of them insist that the box must be recovered. When I leave this room tonight I am going over to Riverdale and stalk all by myself. I'm going to get a glimpse of that mysterious stranger. He carries a scar of mine somewhere, for I hit him that night."

The door opened and the executive chamber became silent.

"Count Paroff," boomed the voice of Vroon. "He will present his credentials."

This formality was executed as prescribed by the rules; and Count Paroff was given his chair. He spoke for a while, rather pompously.

"The head organization is not satisfied with its offspring in this Hargrave affair," he said in conclusion. "You are slow."

"Then you have come with some suggestions for the betterment of our business?" asked Braine ironically.

"Sir, this is not the hour for flippancy," said the agent coldly. Braine made a sign with his hand, a sign not observed by every one. Instantly Paroff bent lowly. He recognized that the speaker was the actual, not the nominal, head of the American branch.

"What are your suggestions?" inquired the nominal head from his chair, anxious to avoid a clash between the newcomer and the truculent master of them all.

"I have been informed that Hargrave's daughter has never seen her father, not even a photograph of him," said Paroff, more amiably.

"We are absolutely certain that this is the case," said the nominal head, who was known as the president. "But we tried one play in that direction, and it failed miserably."

"I have the story," replied Paroff. "It was clumsily done. The ruse was an old one."

Braine was frank enough to admit the truth of this statement, however much he disliked the admission. "I modeled."

"I have authority to take up this affair. We cannot wait at all. Those government plans of fortifications of the Panama are being. There's your millions. But the fact remains that it is the law of the Black Hundred now to stop down till absolutely defeated. The hidden million is but bait, we must find and break this renegade Hargrave."

"If he lives," said Braine.

"Who can say one way or another?" brusquely asked Paroff. "The fact that all your plans and schemes have come to naught should tell you that you are not fighting."

"There is but one way to bring it to a truth."

"And that is to make a cat's paw of his daughter," suggested Braine. "And we have worked and tried and ceaselessly. We are quite capable of listening to your suggestions, but with his ear to the ground, he is selling about. And some day, some energetic friend of mine will be back for that bullet."

Count Paroff cleared his throat and laid his plans before the assembly. "To act frankly and to the point, to go boldly to the Hargrave home and proclaim myself Hargrave. I can disguise myself in a hundred ways, but I will at least temporarily fool the butler."

"Who has been with his master for fourteen years, knows every move, habit, gesture, inflection," interposed Braine. "But proceed, count, proceed. You will remember the old adage; too many cooks."

"Ah," flashed back the count, "but a new cook?"

Olga touched Braine's arm warningly. "You mean, then, that there has been talk in St. Petersburg of disposing of some one?"

"A good deal of talk, sir," haughtily, forgetting that he had bent humbly enough but a few moments gone.

"Very well; go on."

Thought the man at the peephole above. "There's another adage. When thieves fall out, then honest men get their dues. Yes, yes, proceed, proceed."

Paroff went on. "I shall, then, go frankly to the Hargrave house and claim my own. Meantime I leave to you the business of luring the butler away. Half an hour is all I need to bring that child here, to break the wall that stands between us and what we seek."

"Is that so?" murmured Braine. "Olga, I want you to play a trick on this handsome delegate-at-large. I'm not very enthusiastic over his talk. I want him humiliated. All you have to do, he says, is to walk into the Hargrave house and walk out again."

Well, let's you and I see that he does this and nothing else. I'll have no one meddling with my own game."

Some one sneezed, and everybody looked at his neighbor. The sneeze was repeated, but muffled, as if some one was desperately anxious to avoid sneezing.

"It came from above!" whispered Olga. "Don't look up!"

Braine was cool. He walked idly across the room to where Vroon sat. "Very well, Paroff, we give you free rein. To Vroon he said. "Some one is watching us from the room overhead. I thought that room belonged to us."

"It does," said Vroon stolidly. "Then how is it that some one is watching from up there? No excitement. I'm going to bid every one good-night, then I'm going to investigate. When I leave you will quietly send men to all exits to the building. I want the man who sneezed, and I want him badly."

Olga departed with Braine, only she immediately sought the taxi that brought her and was driven home. It was always understood that when any exploit was under way here, she was to make her departure.

Vroon stationed his men at the several exits and Braine went upstairs. The man who had sneezed, however, had vanished as completely as if he had worn that invisible cloak one reads about in the Persian tales. As a matter of fact, after the second sneeze he had gone up to the roof, got out by the trap, and jumped.

Other risky business, too—to the next roof and had clambered down the fire escape of the second building. He was swearing immoderately. After all these days of care and planning, after all his cleverness in locating the rendezvous of the Black Hundred, and

Norton Wanted to Kiss Her. the powder to blow him up with. "But my dear, you must be very careful," he said. "Jones and I will always be about somewhere. If they really get hold of you once, God alone knows what will happen. It is not you it is your poor father they want to bring out into the open. If they knew where he was they would not bother you in the least."

"Have I really a father? Sometimes I doubt. Why couldn't he steal into the house and see me, just once?"

"Perhaps he dares not. This house is always watched, night and day."

now to lose his advantage because of an uncontrollable sneeze? He would never dare go back, and just when he was beginning to pick up fine bits of information? So Florence Hargrave was going to have a new father in a day or so? There were some clever rogues among this band of theirs; but their cleverness was well offset by an equal number of fools.

Yes, there were some clever rogues, and to prove this assertion Braine secured a taxicab and drove furiously away, his destination the home of his ancient enemy. He dropped the cab a block or two away and presently stowed himself away in the summer house at the left of the lawn. It would have been a capital idea—that is, if the other man had not thought of and anticipated this very thing. So he used a public pay station telephone and Braine waited in vain, waited till the lights in the Hargrave house went out one by one and it became wrapped in darkness within and moonshine without.

Braine was a philosopher. He returned to his waiting taxicab drove home, paid the bill, smiling grimly, and went to bed. It was going to be a wonderful game of blind man's buff, and it was going to be sport to watch this fool Paroff blunder into a pit.

The next afternoon Florence and Norton sat in the summer house talking of the future. Lovers are prone to talk of that. As if anything else in the world ever equals the present! They talked of nice little apartments and vacations in the summer and how much they would save out of his salary, and a thousand and one other things which would not interest you at all if I recounted them in detail. But they did love each other, and they were going to be married, you may be certain of that. They did not care a snap of the finger what Jones thought. They were going to be married, and that was all there was to it. Of course, Florence couldn't touch a penny of her father's money. If he, Norton, couldn't take care of her without help, why, he wouldn't be worth to kiss her, but the eternal Jones might be watching from the windows; and so he patted her hand instead and walked down the gravelled path to the street.

It was difficult work for Florence to play at friendship. She was like her father; she did not bestow it on every one. She had given her friendship to the Russian, the first real friendship in her life, and she had been roughly disillusioned. But if the countess could act so cold she; and of the two her acting was the more consummate. She could smile and laugh and jest, all the while her heart was burning with wrath.

though you'll look in vain to discover any one. Your father knows best what he is doing, my dear girl! You see, I met him years ago in Ohio, and when he started out to do a certain thing he generally did it. He never botched any of his plans. So we all must wait. Only I'm going to marry you all the same, whether he likes it or not. The rogues will try to impose upon you again, but do not pay any attention to notes or personals in the papers. And it was a lucky thing that I was on the freighter that picked you up at sea. I shall always wonder how that yacht took fire."

"So shall I," replied Florence, her brows drawing together in puzzlement. "Sometimes I think I must have done it. You know, people out of their heads do strange things. And this man Braine is a scoundrel!"

"Yes, and more than that, he is the dear friend of the countess. But understand you must never let her dream or suspect that you know. By lulling her into overconfidence some day she will naturally grow careless, and then we'll have them all. I think I understand what your father's idea is. Not to have them arrested for blackmail, but practically to exterminate them, put them in prison for such terms of years that they'll die there. When you see a snake a poisonous one don't let it get away. Kill it. Well, I must be off to work."

"And you be careful, too. You are in more danger than I am."

"But I'm a man and can dodge quick," he laughed, picking up his hat. "What a horrid thing money is! If I hadn't any money, nobody would bother me."

"I would," he smiled. He wanted to kiss her, but the eternal Jones might be watching from the windows; and so he patted her hand instead and walked down the gravelled path to the street.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur it Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks dry, wisp and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle of "Weyh's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair, besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly.

You maintain a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years young.

CORRESPONDENCE

OSCEOLA MILLS

William Woodcock, H. S. Brown, A. J. Oldham and Owen Kline are among a party of hunters in the Green Woods. A telephone message states they shot a fine buck yesterday.

The funeral of Mrs. Catherine Quigley was held this morning at the Catholic church, Rev. M. J. Desmond officiating. The deceased was aged about 71 years and had been a resident of the town for over fifty years. Her husband preceded her several years ago. The following children survive her: Mrs. Jas. Cahill, Mrs. Christoff and George, of this place and William, of Reno.

Postmaster Arthur Brown has arranged that a mail will be received on the train from Tyrone at 10:00 P. M. This will be distributed early the following morning. This arrangement will be greatly appreciated by the business and traveling men, as they will by this plan receive mail about three hours earlier than formerly.

The entertainment under the direction of the high school faculty was greatly appreciated by those who were present. Tuesday evening. There should have been a larger attendance, however. This is not a money-making scheme, but simply for the entertainment and culture of our town. We hope the remaining numbers of the course will be better attended.

CLEARFIELD, R. F. D., NO. 2

Roy Desmond, who is a patient at the state sanitarium, at Mt. Airy, for tuberculosis sufferers, has just written his mother, Mrs. Clara Newman, that he is slowly improving and hopes to be discharged in a few months.

A lady who was at Mrs. G. W. Ogden's birthday surprise party Saturday reminds us that we did not give a complete report of the affair and adds: "When Mrs. Ogden came home from town and found 28 neighbors and friends gathered around and they had prepared a party, such a planer as only Mrs. Ogden ladies are famed for." But, how could we know anything about that dinner when we never got so much as a word of it?

There is an unfortunate young man in these parts who has made himself disagreeable with his best girl, and thing we can clear the affair up for him have decided to act as arbitrator. To begin with, we would say: "Mabel, you have cruelly wronged your lover, for he was not with the other girl as you suspect. No, he is as innocent as a babe in a cradle and was never happier than he was that evening when he started for your home and he almost reached it and all the while was thinking of you and how you could have cut him with a knife. In fact, these things completely absorbed him and when he saw a pretty little black and white kitten he could not help but reach down to stroke it. (You know young men in love always want to be stroking something.) and Oh! Lady of Heaven! it was the wrong kind of a kitten. Now Mabel, do you see how you have wronged your innocent lover? I can assure you he will be around as soon as he gets out of bed, and, Mabel, I would advise you not to be too inquisitive, it might embarrass him. Now then, we venture there will be a sweet reunion to these parts in the near future, and it makes us feel like a great philanthropist to know we have played an important part in bringing it about."

Y. M. C. A. MINSTRELS REHEARSE AGAIN TONIGHT

The regular rehearsals of the Y. M. C. A. Minstrels will be held at the association rooms this evening. The work is progressing nicely for the big local talent show which will be held the next week in December.

IN THE MOVIES

OPENING A BANKER'S EYES AT THE GLOBE TONIGHT

"Tainted Money." John Bennett, wealthy financier, does not realize the misery he is causing by his manipulation of the stock market. His daughter Constance shares his delight in his success. Their eyes are opened by David, a settlement worker.

"It Was Some Party." A laughter producing comedy that will delight the audience.

"Broncho Billy's Jealousy." Broncho Billy had promised Marguerite that he would never drink again. She agreed to marry him. That afternoon a village gossip sees Marguerite with Roy Turner and makes trouble, but the tangle is straightened out in time to prevent a duel.

"Algiers Sister" is a good western comedy of life on the plains.

"MR. NOAD'S ADLESS DAY" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

opera house movies. "Mr. Noad's Adless Day." Mr. Noad goes to have the endless line of advertisements that he sees every day. In a dream, Satan comes and promises him anything that he wishes for, and Mr. Noad promptly wishes for an adless world. Still dreaming he sees everything without a label, even to numbers on the doors and wakes up glad for the advertisements he sets.

"The Mystery of Grayson Hall." The unraveling of this story a web of avarice and jealousy is laid bare. The play has rare dramatic power. Every part is played by an artist.

"The Fruit of Evil" is a stock drama at the opera house this evening.

under arrest or likely to depart from the place wherein he has been located and from which it is sought to return him, and delay would be fatal.

"Some governors have adopted an ironclad rule to the effect that they will not consider any question involved in a matter of extradition other than the identity of the individual under arrest. While no doubt that rule serves to shut off much of the resistance and the resultant hearings involved therein, at the same time it is hard to believe that grave wrongs may not be done to liberty and personal rights by the enforcement of such a rule.

"And yet there are most substantial reasons to be urged against the system of allowing a hearing on the question of the justice of the demand to return the alleged fugitive. If a hearing on any question other than the question of identity is granted, it must of necessity involve the production of evidence of acts that occurred oftentimes many hundreds and sometimes thousands of miles from the seat of hearing. Even on the question of flight there is only meager possibility of getting at the real facts in the ordinary case. The prisoner will, of course, deny that he fled, and it is possible that the agent of the governor who is present with the requisition may not have knowledge on that subject. Frequently a prisoner is found among friends who profess to have intimate knowledge of the facts and circumstances of the alleged flight. In that case, if a hearing is to be granted the prisoner will produce what seems to be overwhelming proof to controvert the charges that he is a fugitive from justice. Again, on the other hand, the fact may be that the prisoner did not flee from justice but finds himself unable of adducing any proof."

EMBEZZLEMENT CHARGED AGAINST DU BOIS MAN

C. P. Munch was placed under arrest yesterday afternoon, charged with embezzlement of funds belonging to the C. P. Munch Coal company. The information was made by W. R. Davis, miner of Local Union 1188 of District No. 3, United Mine Workers of America. It is alleged that the assets or money was converted between November 3, 1913, to December, 1914, the total amount of money alleged as converted, approximately $10,000.

Mr. Munch, however, furnished bail to the sum of $500 for the appearance of Mr. Munch at the quarter sessions in December, a hearing being waived before Justice Neff.

Dr. F. D. Leopold, dentist, will be absent from his office until November 18th.

GOOD NEWS

For Woman or Miss
Who Has a
COAT, SUIT OR DRESS
To Buy

Right when the winter season is starting and the cold winds are piercing this Store is to the front with the following remarkable values in warm, serviceable and stylish winter garments, at a saving in price that is very much to your advantage.

Coats at $6.95

Exceptional coats for this price, made of diagonal suitings and fancy mixtures. Colors are navy, grey, black, brown and green. The style, quality and workmanship found in these coats will compare to advantage with coats that sell for ten dollars in the average store.

Coats at $8.50

Misses' and juniors' sport coats in the pretty new plaids and mixtures in a large assortment of styles.

Coats at $9.75

The new college coats in plaids and mixtures. Women's and misses' practical winter coats made for warmth and service, in plain colors, fancy mixtures and plaids. Remarkable values at $9.75.

Coats at $12.50

Mixtures, plain colors, plaids and checks. The popular belted styles are included in this line as well as college coats and long coats. Splendid materials for warmth and wear.

Coats at $15.00

The coats at this price include the extremely stylish "loose fitting" back, which is growing in favor as the season advances; college coats and other styles in great assortments at this price. The materials embrace all the popular weaves and colors that are considered "good" this season.

Coats at $19.75

The new loose fitting back or the stylish belted effects in full or three-quarter lengths, with a wide range of materials including Sharkskin, zebiline, velour, boucle, fancy mixtures and plaids.

Coats at $25.00

"Printzess" coats that contain style, workmanship and materials that readily distinguish them from the average coat selling for $30.00 and $32.50. Materials are: novelty mixtures, zebelines, sharkskin, plaids and wool corduroys.

Suits at $15.00

These new suits look like garments that ordinarily sell for a much higher price. Made of all wool cheviot, diagonals and serges. Long or short jackets in misses, junior or ladies sizes, with style, finish and workmanship of the best. Extra values every one of them at $15.00.

Suits at $19.75

We want you to compare the garments we show here for $19.75 with the $25.00 garments shown elsewhere. We feel sure the comparison will be favorable to our suits. They are here in the latest fashion cut in long or short jackets. Materials are poplins, chevots, gaberdine and serges.

A Good Time to Select the Furs

There will be no better time during the season for looking over fur assortments. Later there will not be the same completeness to stocks and selection will necessarily be more limited. We have taken pains to provide the best skins possible to procure and we pride ourselves upon the completeness of the line we show and upon the excellent quality of the furs we offer for your inspection and selection. You will find here many beautiful matched sets, separate muffs and scarfs and handsomely lined fur coats at prices the most reasonable we have able to offer our patrons for several seasons.

Fur sets from $10.00 up to $100.00 a set.

Fur scarfs from $2.95 up to $35.00 each.

Fur muffs from $3.00 up to $65.00 each.

Fur coats from $39.75 up to $100.00 each.

Fur trimming in a wide assortment of the new novelty neck and cuff sets as well as by the yard.
